

Central Vancouver, Minnehaha and The Heights

Hudson's Bay: If you see what looks like a piano on wheels zipping around town, you'll know it's actually a piano ambulance. Barry Leung of Fastsigns, a business on East Mill Plain Boulevard, recently toured the School of Piano Technology for the Blind and was sufficiently impressed by its achievements to provide the vehicle signage for the piano hospital's little white car. "The program has been giving meaningful careers to most of its graduates, which bucks the trend of high unemployment rates for blind and visually impaired individuals," he said. The school sends blind piano technicians on house calls to diagnose problems with people's pianos and repair them.

Hudson's Bay: FASTSIGNS recently made this car, owned by the School of Piano Technology for the Blind, look like a piano on wheels.